INTRODUCTION

The residence is a handsome three-bay, two-storey house distinguished by its attractive red-brick façade and full-height canted bay windows flanking the principal entrance. A pitched slate roof, traditional chimney stacks, granite windowsills and lintels, and a particularly attractive timber entrance door with Art Nouveau-style sidelights and fanlight contribute to the architectural character of the property.

Internally, Anneville offers generously proportioned and versatile accommodation, retaining many traditional features throughout. High ceilings, decorative cornicing, substantial timber joinery and a collection of attractive period fireplaces give the house a distinctive sense of character. The principal reception rooms are bright and spacious, with large windows providing excellent natural light and pleasant views over the surrounding grounds. The accommodation also includes a well-proportioned kitchen, utility facilities and four spacious bedrooms.

Outside, the residence is surrounded by mature gardens and established trees and hedging, providing an attractive and private setting. A paved terrace offers an inviting outdoor area overlooking the gardens. Of particular interest is the traditional stone-built courtyard, comprising a range of characterful outbuildings with timber doors and traditional detailing. The adjoining stables and ancillary buildings provide useful accommodation with potential for equestrian, hobby or storage purposes, subject to any necessary consents.

Beyond the residential grounds is a substantial farmyard, incorporating a range of enclosed and open-fronted agricultural sheds arranged around generous concrete and gravelled working areas. These buildings provide useful facilities for machinery, livestock, general agricultural or storage purposes and complement the wider holding. The lands are predominantly laid out in grass and extend around the residence, farmyard and outbuildings. Mature hedgerows, established trees and traditional field boundaries create an appealing rural environment, while the Clonard River provides a particularly attractive natural boundary.

A remarkable feature of the property is Saint Finian's Church, a disused church dating from 1808, standing on the historic site of an abbey. Retaining many original architectural features, the church is surrounded by an historic graveyard and adds a unique historical dimension to the property.

Anneville enjoys an attractive rural setting at Clonard, Co. Meath, while remaining conveniently located for commuters. Enfield and access to the M4/N4 road network are approximately 13 minutes away, providing excellent connectivity to the capital and surrounding towns. Dublin City Centre is approximately 45 minutes by car, while Dublin Airport is approximately 45 minutes away.
